the first half of the 19th century, the number of slaves in the United States increased from 700,000 to 4 million. This was due to the importation of slaves from Africa and the internal slave trade. The internal slave trade involved the kidnapping of free African Americans and the sale of slaves to plantations in the South. The importation of slaves from Africa ended in 1808, but the internal slave trade continued until the Civil War.
